

These general downturns in retail business, sparked largely by racial demonstrations in eating places, if left unchecked, might well result in a serious disruption of the flow of interstate commerce. This impact, of course, would not be limited to the purchase of food interstate; rather it would extend to the purchase of goods for resale generally. No sales means no purchases, and this effect has an immediate and adverse affect on interstate commerce.